Chapter 2. Selecting and using anthelmintics appropriately

Overview

Knowledge and attitudes have changed dramatically since the anthelmintics currently used were first developed and registered. The sector should act in accordance with current best evidence as laid out in the CANTER guidelines. As resistance likely increases and new evidence comes to light, recommendations continually evolve; these guidelines will evolve to provide prescribers with a framework to follow.

Where the yard plan for parasite control identifies the need for administration of an anthelmintic, Chapter 2 aims to provide guidance regarding how to select and use that anthelmintic appropriately.
